

What 3 Things Should You Know About Your English Tutor?

Whether you are a school/college student, an applicant of private/government job, or a common man, you want to improve your oral and verbal communication in English, which is a global language. As a student, you want to score more in your tests and term-end exams, apart from having a better understanding of the language.

You start looking for extra guidance when you miss a topic or you are unable to grasp the subject at your school. In your search, you come across several options, like classroom instructions at a coaching institute, private/personal guidance at home, or online tutor. Whether you opt for English tutoring online or private tutor at home, you need to get in touch with a good one so that you can have a better value to your time and effort. You can do this when you will have an idea on what you should about an instructor. Here are the three aspects that you should look for in an English tutor:

1. Educational and teaching background

Knowing the educational background of an instructor doesn't ensure that he/she will be a great teacher. However, a trained and skilled teaching professional can help you get more in your studies in comparison with someone else, like your classmate. Your classmate can be helpful for you if you are just looking for someone to elaborate something to you. But a tutor with a good academic record and teaching background will be more beneficial for you if you need more personalized attention while solving your English learning problems at high school or advanced level.

An experienced and reputed tutor will surely have a college/university degree or/and teaching certificate, disclosing his/her specialization in teaching English. Getting in touch with your friends and other known people and requesting them for reference will be a great help for you.

2. Teaching style

As you differ from your classmates/friends in your learning capacity, so educators have their own way of teaching. They are skilled in applying several methods to facilitate you in your English learning. However, they have a specific way of teaching, which may not be suitable for your learning style. For instance, some tutors love applying quizzes or games while instructing students, but you may not like the same. The best way for you is to attain free classes for a few days to know their instructing style and start your learning with the tutor if you love his/her way of teaching English.

3. Know your need

Before selecting a tutor your English learning, you should decide what you want to achieve at the end. Your expectations may be scoring high marks/grades in exams or having a good grasp on the English language.

Conclusion

Your English learning depends on both of you, you and your educator. Making your expectations clear and knowing an instructor's educational background, experience and teaching style will help you attain what you want. Stay focused and follow your tutor's instructions to move forward in your English study.
